PREFATORY NOTE.

THE present volume is the second in the series published in commemoration of Henry Richards Luard, D.D., Fellow of Trinity College, and Registry of the University from 1862 to 1891. The circumstances under which the series was begun have been set forth by Mr Leathes, in the preface to his edition of Grace Book A.

It has been found necessary to divide Grace Book B into two parts, for it covers a long period, 1488—1549, and is about twice the size of Grace Book A. To prevent further delay the first part is now issued as a separate volume, and the second part will be issued early in 1904.

The text of Grace Book B has been printed from a transcript by Mr A. Rogers, collated with the original by Mr F. E. Bickley, of the British Museum.

The first draft of the slips for the index was the work of Mr W. A. J. Archbold, who was prevented from finishing his work as editor by the pressure of other duties.

Miss Bateson is responsible for the Introduction, for the Index in its final form, and for the list of corrigenda.

J. W. CLARK,

INTRODUCTION.

THE book which has long been known in the Registry as Grace Book B is, like Grace Book A, more correctly called Registra Procuratorum, and indeed the name Grace Book now becomes distinctly a misnomer, inasmuch as after 1501 the proctors ceased to register the graces with their accounts, and the graces then begin to be registered as a separate volume, Grace Book C. After 1501 Grace Book B is merely a proctors' account book, and with few exceptions graces are mentioned only where they refer to matters directly affecting the proctors' financial statement. An element of interest is thus lost, for whereas up to 1501 the Proctors' Registra have supplied the events in the academic career of every questionist, after that date they supply only the first and last event in each career, namely, the giving of the caution and the receiving of the degree. For favours conferred by grace without payment, reference must be made to Grace Book C, which Mr Searle is about to edit.

Character
book.

It will be noticed that the manuscript is not in a perfect state; three pages are lost (ff. 67—70). Some of the writing is careless and poor, many hands having been employed.

The manuscript.

Mr Leathes' introduction to Grace Book A leaves little to add by way of elucidation to the present text. A brief supplement only is needed to cover the few fresh difficulties raised by the use of phrases which do not occur in Grace Book A. The order of the University course remains unchanged, and the favours conferred upon individuals, by graces which allowed them to deviate from the regular course, fall under the same groups as before. The fees are unchanged, but after 1501 it becomes usual not to specify the "communae" of individuals, and merely to name the sum total, and the number of persons making payment. By entering the lists of degrees the proctors supply a means of checking their statement, as

Scheme of the introduction.

every degree (with certain exceptions to be discussed below) involved a payment of commons.

Cautions. The cautions after 1500 were less often made in the form of books, and where books are mentioned in the later registers they are too often without a title. The list of books deposited as cautions becomes therefore of less value than before, but it is not without interest, inasmuch as it shows the exceedingly slow movement of the classical revival. An astronomical instrument was once deposited as caution (p. 127), but the usual caution was a piece of silver plate. The list of these beautiful pledges, all lost, is dismal reading, for any one of them would be priceless now.

LIST OF BOOKS DEPOSITED AS CAUTIONS.

The number in brackets after the name denotes the number of times that a copy of the work is recorded as having been deposited. In such cases only one reference is given.

The deposit of a printed Latin translation of Plato gives the sole indication that a breath of the revived classical learning had reached the University, so far, that is to say, as the cautions of questionists are concerned.

Besides the payment of commons and fines which had been the Sale of main source of University income in the previous period, the sale of ^{graces.}graces which allowed personal exemptions begins to be an important item of receipt, and this is a new feature. To escape the necessary "readings" the fee varied from 3s. 4d. to £1. 6s. 8d., standing most commonly at 10s.; the dispensation from giving "ordinary" lectures cost something less; a man recovered a lost degree by a payment of five marks to St Mary's Church (p. 65). Another was admitted to enter in canon law, his admission to stand for the full degree of bachelor, on a payment of ten marks to the common chest (p. 65); a Gilbertine canon bought for £10 a grace (p. 66) to pass at once from admission to commencement (B.D.).

In Grace Book A nearly all the graces were privileges granted for the benefit of particular persons: with Grace Book B the congregation begins to make some general orders. A statute relating to the library (see below) was set aside (p. 133) in favour of monks studying in the University. A grace was passed laying down a rule for the dress of the bedels present and future (p. 67). A grace was drawn up (p. 55) in the form of a grant to anyone (N.), who gave a benefaction in books and money, to receive in return participation in the prayers for any founder of a "chest."

The University Statutes and the cost of writing them are repeatedly referred to; on p. 22 the statutes of the chest¹, on p. 44 the statute for the payments of the religious at inceptions², on p. 97 the statute for the disputations of B.A.'s³, on p. 121 the statute requiring a boy to keep the schools⁴.

History of the period.

The University was repeatedly visited by Henry VII. and his mother. In 1491 the fee to the king's clerk of the market (p. 29) attests the royal presence somewhere in the neighbourhood, and the king was given "Damascus" water, i.e. rose-water distilled from damask roses; in 1498 (p. 111) the king and queen's coming led to an outlay of five nobles on the glazing of the schools, and a fee to his clerk of the market; the king's coming in 1506 is alluded to (p. 213) as necessitating expense on a procession⁵. It was then that Fisher preached his famous sermon before Henry VII., which told of the "weariness of study and learning" that had infected nearly all, he knows not whether as the result of the continual strifes with the town and the wrongs the townsmen inflict; or of the plague, which has carried off many; or of the want of patrons of the arts⁶. The king's gift of £10 for his exequies, paid by the Abbot of Westminster (p. 211), had begun to be an item in the University receipts 1504-5 (p. 202), and Fisher's hint of the need for further benefactions brought nothing. The king was in Cambridge again in 1508, and was again the cause of expense to the University, as a torchlight procession was held (p. 231).

The University had shown its appreciation of the value of Henry's life by saying masses for him in 1492 (p. 50) when he was besieging Boulogne and making the treaty of Étaples. Prayers likewise were said for the dead prince Arthur (p. 173), and Queen

⁴ Not found.

⁶ It was the year in which fewest degrees were conferred, see the table below.

Catharine of Arragon sent a messenger to announce the birth of her short-lived firstborn son (p. 250).

The negotiations with Lady Margaret begin (p. 68) with Fisher's dinner at Greenwich, whither he went as senior proctor, probably to get money for St Mary's Church¹. In 1498 the accounts make the first mention of her proposal to found a readership, which was then submitted to the inspection of the Vice-Chancellor and Doctors of Divinity. From that time the correspondence with her was regular, and the proctors were often at her manors of Colyweston or Bugden. She on her part wrote a letter (p. 154) concerning the pension of Philip Morgan, a bedel, an M.D., and her physician. Her councillors were in Cambridge 1501-2 (pp. 172-5), either for the arbitration which she was about to undertake in the dispute between Town and University, or for the business connected with the Divinity lecturers. Urmston, her chamberlain, was specially active on her behalf².

Many are the gifts of pike, eels, tench, roach, perch, chub, bream, comfits, wine, sugar and money sent to great persons or given to the messengers of the great, and registered in the accounts. The papal nuncio got a complimentary gift of five marks, and among the recipients of similar courtesies were Fox, as bishop of Exeter and of Durham, the bishop of Ely of course repeatedly, and many other bishops, the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Devon and the Earl of Oxford. The last alone made direct return, and sent the University a doe. How it was distributed or consumed we are not told: apparently the University, unlike the borough, resisted the temptation to aldermanic feasting into which civic governing bodies were first led by the receipt of these return courtesies.

The judges, and particularly Sir Robert Rede, were of course regular receivers from town and University alike; the knights of the county (p. 105) and "ly questemen" (p. 219) came in for something in their turn, perhaps when special circumstances made it desirable to soothe the ruffled spirits of jurors hostile to University interests. The proctors gave courtesies, it may be suspected, more or less at their own risk; the Vice-Chancellor found his present of six pairs of gloves to Lady Margaret disallowed (p. 243), and at the same time his charge for preaching was severely cancelled (p. 248).

² Cf. Cooper's Memoir of Lady Margaret, ed. J. E. B. Mayor, for which Grace Book B has been largely used.

Degrees of incorporation.

Degrees of incorporation (of a more or less honorary kind) were distributed liberally. The Chancellor of the University of Oxford, Russell, bishop of Lincoln, was incorporated (p. 6) with some state, for the schools were specially cleaned (p. 10). The University hastened to remedy the annoyance caused to the Chancellor of Salisbury, Robert Dockett (p. 16), who had asked to be incorporated apparently without avail; on a further application the reply was that of course Cambridge would do what Bologna was willing to do. Of the second Duke of Suffolk's two sons, Humphrey de la Pole took the full course and entered the Church, but William (of whom nothing further is known) was given free entry "at the time of congregation and passing of graces," perhaps merely as a spectator. In 1496 a batch of notable people was admitted to incorporation, Thomas Savage, bishop of Rochester, William Smith, bishop of Lincoln, Dr Jane, the future bishop of Norwich, Dr Fitzjames, the future bishop of Rochester, a confessor to Lady Margaret, Dr Edmund Martyn, the dean of St Stephen's, Westminster, and a Master in Chancery, and Warham, Master of the Rolls, future archbishop of Canterbury. In 1500 the king's secretary, Ruthal, afterwards bishop of Durham, and Mayhew, the king's almoner, were incorporated. In 1506 Erasmus was made Doctor of Divinity (p. 222). In 1493 Skelton the poet was crowned with laurel (p. 54). Besides numberless incorporations ad eundem for Oxford men, Bologna is recognized four times (pp. 54, 70, 124, 133), Rome three times (pp. 41, 160, 182), Siena once (p. 113).

The University in State and Church.

The harmony between the University and the State was unbroken, though the University doctors took counsel how to reply to the judges concerning some matter unnamed (p. 22) and spent 7*d.* on drink over the discussion. In 1508 the University had a case pending before the judges at Westminster (p. 231)¹. In its relation to the Church, the University had as yet no graver difficulty to meet than some trouble in getting Convocation to recognize its exemption from taxation (p. 9)². The writing of a form of proxy (perhaps for Convocation) is named (p. 138). A negociation was being prosecuted at Rome 1499-1500 (p. 130) but of what nature does not appear.

Controversy with the town.

The chronic friction with the town is attested by numerous entries relating to injuries done to burgesses, and journeys to the court and other centres of influence with the object of securing the mastery over the "oppidans." In 1495 there was controversy with the Mayor, and in 1499—1501 with the townsmen. Hugh Rankyn, a fishmonger¹, was wounded (p. 163), and the case, brought at the petition and prosecution of the Mayor and community of the town, came ultimately before the king in Council (p. 163). As early as 1490 the Vice-Chancellor had paid a sum to the chest as a fine for the disturbance of Hugh Rankyn's peace (p. 29). The Lady Margaret's arbitration between the town and University is referred to in 1503 when the indentures were written², but in 1508-9 another composition had to be prepared (p. 243). "False scholars," namely, as the statutes show³, students who disturbed the peace, were constantly being banished (pp. 29, 231), or fined on appeals before the Vice-Chancellor. In 1506 an appeal was moved from the Vice-Chancellor to the University (p. 211), namely to the congregation of regents and non-regents⁴.

¹ Perhaps the Barford case, begun 1505-6. Cooper's Annals, i. 276.

In 1490-1 a composition was agreed to between the University Colleges and the Colleges (p. 29), but of what nature does not appear. The Proctors' Register is used to record an agreement made before the Vice-Chancellor between Trinity Hall and King's College with regard to the use of a drain, its proper trapping, with a moveable grate containing holes not larger than a penny piece, and for its weekly cleaning⁵ (1495).

Hostel rows are noticed almost as frequently as town and gown rows, and St Nicholas' and St Clement's students seem to have been specially prone to internecine warfare; St Nicholas' hostel carried on a feud with Christ's College for two nights (p. 236), St Clement's had a fray with the other hostels (p. 112), and Gonville Hall and Fishwick Hostel, which were closely connected, were for a time unfriendly (p. 111). Hostel feuds.

There begin to be signs that mathematics were to be given a more prominent place in the University studies. In 1492 a grace was granted to Malleverey allowing two years of study at Oxford Teaching of mathematics.

¹ So it would appear from the fact that he provided most of the fish for the town's courtesies, Cooper's Annals, i. pp. 250, 254; and on p. 256 see an allusion to his case in the borough account.

² For a full account see Cooper's Annals, i. 258, and the Memoir of Lady Margaret, p. 80.

and Cambridge to be the complete "forma" for the degree of "bachelor in geometry." Such a degree is altogether exceptional, but what proves that an advance was taking place is the regular appointment of mathematical lecturers of a professional kind, and this from the first year of the sixteenth century.

In 1501 Roger Collingwood began to receive his stipend of two marks for mathematical lectures, and in 1503-4 a "lector" unnamed was paid. In 1504-5 the payment of a fee of 8*d.* "pro lectura mathematica" begins to be systematically recorded as being paid in the "commons," and Roger Collingwood thenceforward receives his two marks with regularity. An undated statute¹ describes the circumstances under which the readership was established, and requires the payment of 8*d.* from each questionist. It has been supposed to be of later date², but these details derived from Grace Book B seem to show that it was passed about 1503. Collingwood, the author of a work called "Arithmetica experimentalis"³, seems to have been succeeded in 1507-8 by Peyto, who was then lecturing at a fee of £4 for the three terms; in 1509-10, Grindall succeeded at the same stipend; and in 1510, on Grindall's death (p. 251), Bullock succeeded.

Music.

Humphrey Freyvel, having studied music for two years in the University and practised it for five in the country, was allowed by grace to enter in music (p. 100); Robert Fairfax, organist of St Alban's, several of whose musical compositions are extant⁴, was allowed to enter, having studied "musica speculativa" and practised it for ten years (p. 161).

Law lectures.

A statute of uncertain date required every bachelor or doctor in canon or civil law, who was about to read ordinarily or cursorily, to hire for the purpose the University schools, unless these were already let⁵. The Grace Book is full of references to the payment made to the chest "pro cathedra," and for the hire of the schools. In 1492 John Harrington, doctor of laws, was allowed to be incorporated if he read three days in the chair in the schools of his faculty, publicly and within a term of his incorporation. Doctors Dolman, Machell, Rachiff, and Rude are named as hiring the schools or giving cautions for the chair, probably in guarantee that they or their deputies would hire it for lecture. In 1510 (p. 251) the University chaplain paid £2 for the chair of canon law "because this year there is no doctor holding that chair."

Besides the creation of the Lady Margaret lectureship in Divinity the Grace Book notices a theological lecture founded by one Hussey (p. 232) of which nothing seems to be known.

Hussey's
theological lecture.

John Philip the proctor in 1508 claims a fee of £3. 13s. for his Terence lecture, concerning the payment of which some difficulty seems to have arisen (p. 232). Caius Auberinus had given the Terence lectures for some time, and his fees for long vacation lectures are noted¹ (pp. 44, 175, 185). It would seem then that in several faculties the movement from the "ordinary" lecture system, from the compulsory public lectures of the regent masters and the doctors, to the professional salaried lecturing which was before long to be usual, was in progress at an earlier date than has generally been supposed.

Other lecturers.

The University in 1508-9 was paying Redle for his ordinary lectures 40s., and Ley for ordinary lectures got in that year 18s. (p. 237), but far more usual was the payment of a fine to the University for the non-delivery by regent masters of their ordinary lectures. There are graces of exemption "pro hordinario," "pro lectura communalium" (p. 118, probably the same thing), or the entry "solvat ordinarium pro ipsis terminis" (p. 40). College lectures are mentioned occasionally (p. 38).

Ordinary and
lectures.

Mr Leathes has noticed an entry in Grace Book A which exempts a friar from payment of commons (p. xxxi.). The statement is confirmed by a passage in the present volume (p. 210) which records that "gremials" and friars do not pay commons. In the statute on the teaching of mathematics², to which reference has already been made, besides 8*d.* from every questionist, a fee of 1*s.* is required from each inceptor in arts, and 4*d.* from every monk, "excepting mendicants," probably because these last, the friars that is to say, did not take the arts course. The desire of the friars to escape commons in theology (and they took no other course), seems to have been resented. On p. 6 is a "nota" that B.D.'s are bound to pay commons, and again on p. 20; friars pay on pp. 83, 145, 238, but on p. 238, immediately below a friar's payment, three Dominicans (unnamed) escape. In Part II. of Grace Book B friars pay commons with the rest.

Gremials. The exemption of "gremials" from commons (p. 210) is somewhat puzzling. It is confirmed by an entry (p. 35) which exempts two persons about to enter the sentences (and therefore already bachelors of divinity) from commons "quia sunt de gremio." In an early statute¹ all scholars "exceptis gremialibus" were bound to obey the royal order² respecting the reading of doctors in canon and civil law and the payment of contributions to the bedels, an exception which may well be in harmony with the above entries. The word "gremial" here seems to have a more restricted meaning than that ascribed to it by Peacock³, and by the editors of the Commission Documents⁴, i.e. "permanent residents in the University and generally also associated members of it, living in some college, hall or hostel, as principals, fellows, or scholars."

From the above passages it would appear that the gremials are those who have completed their arts course; these persons are exempt on proceeding to higher degrees from the payment of commons which is exacted from those who have not gone through the arts course (friars, as above, excepted). On p. 35, where many are named as paying commons on entering theology or law, I find that only Henry Babington and Walter Redman, the two who are exempt from commons, can be shown to have been masters of arts⁵. Nowhere have I found any exception to the rule that those who pay commons in the higher faculties have not taken the arts course⁶.

Variation and replication. On the question of the nature of variation and *replication*⁷ the text offers little further enlightenment. One variation and two responsions were made the equivalent (by grace) of two responsions (p. 101); variation is once dispensed with (p. 237). Two bachelors of divinity are permitted to escape reading the sentences and "replying" (pp. 30, 40).

⁵ They incepted in arts in 1482, Grace Book A, p. 163.

⁶ The index was made before this point was noticed: it may serve to differentiate some entries as belonging to two people which have been treated as belonging to a single individual.

⁷ Discussed in Grace Book A, pp. xxiv-v.

The bedels "of either faculty," they and their successors, were Dress. allowed by grace (p. 67) to use in summer "camlet" hoods, of light woollen stuff, instead of those with fur lining, required during the rest of the year. The division into "two faculties" probably refers to the divided responsibility for the schools. By statute¹ one bedel took the schools of divinity and canon and civil law, the other the schools of philosophy.

A canon (p. 17) is allowed to use a silk-lining to his hood (possit uti duplici de serico)—as a master of arts—provided he preaches once to the clergy, and has gone through the other stages necessary to the degree (præter formam). A bachelor (p. 70)—probably of arts—was allowed by grace to use silk in his hood. A bachelor of divinity paid £2 for the habit of a deceased doctor of divinity (p. 202). The warden of Trinity Hall might wear a cap "more doctorum" during sermons, on account of a weakness of the head (p. 112), and an abbot (p. 160) might preach with his head covered. This licence was given under the common seal. There is more than one reference to letters "testificatory," letters of "conversation," issued under the seal (pp. 31, 55, 56).

The Rector of St Bene't's received a dispensation (p. 160) from all congregations except such as are statutory, because he lived alone, and did not hear the congregations announced, and also because his duties to his church prevented him from regular attendance. A bedel's lateness at congregation was fined (p. 202). Certain congregations must be attended and no excuse was allowed (p. 124). There is no mention of the Caput.

The mass of the graces are of the usual pattern, to escape the readings, the giving and hearing of lectures, to be regent or non-regent at pleasure, to reduce the number of years spent on the course, not to "answer the question," to vary the "forma," to be exempt from congregations. One grace "non legere" it is left to the Vice-Chancellor to grant or withhold (p. 18); a grace commutes the years spent on the arts so that they may suffice for the law (p. 7); six years in the liberal and humane arts (p. 122) may suffice to admit to entry in grammar; Plumme, owing to his activity in the founding of Jesus College (p. 112), is exempt from attendance at funerals.

With the exception of George Fitzhugh (Dean of Lincoln and Chancel-Master of Pembroke) all the Chancellors were bishops. Rotherham, lors.

archbishop of York, Blythe, bishop of Salisbury, Fox, bishop of Durham, Fisher, bishop of Rochester, and Ruthal, bishop of Durham, are mentioned in these pages.

Vice-Chancellor.

A list of Vice-Chancellors will be found in the index sub voce. There is a note of Fisher's election by the regents (p. 162).

Proctors.

The following is a list of the Proctors who held office during this period :—

1488-9.	Thomas Metcalf and Roger Laborne.
1489-90.	Walter Redmayn and Edmund Davy.
1490-1.	Richard Burton and John Wolf.
1491-2.	John Suckling and John Wall.
1492-3.	John Lownd and Richard Huddleston.
1493-4.	Richard Brampton and John Robinson.
1494-5.	John Fisher and Thomas Cooke.
1495-6.	James Denton and Thomas Gogney.
1496-7.	William Milner and William Tayth.
1497-8.	Richard Wyatt and John White.
1498-9.	Richard Hutton and Brian Kyddall.
1499-1500.	William Wilton and Robert Birkenshaw.
1500-1.	John Suckling and Thomas Patenson.
1501-2.	Richard Balderston and Richard Wyatt.
1502-3.	Thomas Edeman and John Huchon.
1503-4.	John Jennings and William Woodruff.
1504-5.	Robert Cutler and John Watson.
1505-6.	William Lambert and Edmund Page.
1506-7.	Edmund Natures and Thomas Swayn.
1507-8.	John Philip and Richard Pickard.
1508-9.	John Nicholson and Miles Bickerdyke.
1509-10.	William Capon and William Bridgehouse.
1510-11.	John Sampson and John Scott.

The Proctors, as Mr Leathes has shown, worked hard: they received as yet no regular fee. An allowance for their night patrol, 8s., was made, provided it be not treated as a permanent agreement (p. 105), and a few shillings were generally charged for their ambulation (p. 155); the senior proctor got a mark for his inquest of vagabonds (p. 244), probably for drawing up the indentures (pp. 23, 251). The purchase of their books, probably for the rough notes of which these Registers are the fair copy, is more than once entered; in the senior proctor's book were the oaths (p. 244), in the junior proctor's, the statutes (p. 250). The regularity of their accounts is often disturbed by the discovery of bad money, "barred placks" (half-pence, the circulation of which Henry VII. had forbidden), and the like.

The balance in the chest towards the close of the fifteenth Accounts. century averaged £65, but in spite of increasing receipts the balance by 1510 had greatly diminished: in 1508-9 only £2, in 1509-10 still less was left over after expenses had been paid; in 1510-11 the balance rose to £14. A heavy drain was caused by the University's efforts on behalf of the fabric of St Mary's Church, not only in direct contribution but also in expensive journeys in search of other contributors (pp. 63, 174). A board was set up, on which the names of contributors were enrolled (p. 97), and the gifts of Lady Margaret (p. 202), the bishop of Chichester (p. 11), and Dr Fitzwilliam are noted. St Mary's and the heavy drain in litigation swallowed up the increased receipts.

The statistics of degrees begin to be clearly made out in 1501. In 1499 there are 3 D.D., 12 B.J. Can., 8 B.C.L., 16 M.A., and 33 B.A.¹; in 1500 no tables. From 1501-1511, omitting the degrees in grammar, the table on the following page is the result.

Thomas Barrow, archdeacon of Colchester, agreed in 1494² to University Chests. hand over certain lands to be managed by the University chaplain, and the account of this benefaction was made separately each year. From this chest a small grant to the poor was given annually. There is a reference to the land left by the stationary Fitzjohn (p. 11), and to the repair of certain chests "in decasu," that is, yielding no returns. A "star" chest (for bonds) is mentioned (p. 69)³.

Besides the University chapel (attached to the divinity schools), Library. whose windows were glazed during this period, the old and new libraries are mentioned almost yearly as a source of expense, in locks, and keys, glazing, roofing, carpentering; the books required horning (p. 43); chaining, fastening with "signacula" and "retinacula" (pp. 23, 213); binding (111). Archbishop Rotherham increased his already large benefaction of books⁴ (p. 64); John Lindsey gave a Bible¹ with silver clasps, which were sold (p. 12); Dr Firby gave a book (p. 43). For the prices of books there are several lists, showing what the cautions fetched (pp. 28, 37). The Sentences sold for 3*s.* 4*d.* or 5*s.*, a Portiphory 5*s.*, a Summa Raymundi 3*s.* 4*d.*, the Clementines 6*s.* 8*d.*, a Digest 4*s.*, a Bible 2*s.* Givers of books, accompanied by other donations, were admitted to the suffrage of the mass (p. 55). Student monks were by grace (p. 133) admitted to the use of the library, non obstante statuto; this helps to date the statute² which forbade persons not of graduate standing from entering the library except in the company of a graduate, as having been passed before 1500. Copies of University statutes were affixed to the library door (p. 249).

The schools of divinity, philosophy, canon and civil law are all mentioned (p. 30) as requiring repairs and cleaning; a porter's lodge was made at the Arts School (p. 120), referred to also as ceptus, latesse or insula. A payment of rent to Corpus Christi College for the philosophy schools is of annual occurrence, sometimes in closely abbreviated form, as pensio, feodum, without further particulars. The Schools.

The use of the church of the Franciscans for University Stages. functions was continued; the University paid Bruno Cornelius, perhaps a foreign glazier of some note, for glazing its windows. The building of stages or a theatre (p. 137) for the inception of Masters of Arts was an annual source of income to Cambridge carpenters.

At least six bedels are mentioned; Bedford, Kersey, Morgan, Bedels. Peter, Pickering, Hobbes, and probably some three or four of these held office together³.

Two University chaplains, Ostaby and Chappell, are mentioned in connection with Barrow's chest. Chaplains.

Caius Auberinus continued his work as letter-writer for some time (p. 173), and seems to have been succeeded by the vicar (called also rector) of Trumpington. It is not known, unfortunately, who was vicar just at this time. The idea that it was Skelton the poet, more than once mentioned in these pages, has been shown to be baseless⁴. Others are mentioned as doing the University letter-writers.

same work for the University, for instance a "clerk scholasticus" of King's College, and one Edward "Economus" of the same college (p. 231); also John Philip whilst proctor, and Gabriel Silvester, Master of Cläre (p. 175).

A list of hostels will be found in the index. This Grace Book places the existence of a hostel of St William beyond doubt¹. Of Cambridge inns the Bull is repeatedly mentioned; the Dolphin, Rose, and Saracen's Head are also named.

The chief interest of this volume is of course the biographical material it provides. Much has already been excerpted from it by Cambridge historians, and it is therefore needless to gather together in this preface the names of persons of some importance whose careers can here be traced. Fisher's sermon, preached in 1506, a year of peculiar depression owing probably to exceptional circumstances, as the table of degrees shows, has perhaps spread too gloomy a view of the University's position at the beginning of Henry VIII.'s reign. There is no evidence of steady decline; year in, year out, the University seems to have been pursuing a very steady, methodical, and, according to its lights, an honourable way.

MARY BATESON.

CORRIGENDA.

Several sheets had been struck off before it was noticed that the dates entered on the head-lines were wanting in accuracy. In the index the errors of the head-line dates have not been followed, but those in search of an event whose date must be closely determined will do well to consult the text.

voluisse, ac esse (ut aimus) ex nostro corpore tulisseque ægrius quod nemo id tibi tunc obtulerat, ac denique existimasse fecisse hoc nos ex ingratitudine aut ex quadam negligencia tui Quod quam longe aberat a mentibus nostris deus ille nouit: et sumus nos quoque ipsis nobis testes. Nam quesumus quid esset cur non magni faceremus te eum quem bononia illa clarissima vniuersitas plurimi esse existimarit, at putaremus nostris muneribus indignum: cui illud gymnasium summum honorem, et amplissimum gradum non tribuit: sed eciam tribuendum esse censuit: aut denique cur non omnium studio et amore te complecteremur† eum cuius magna administracio, egregia virtus, singularis doctrina non fructui modico: sed item nobis summe possit esse honestati. Quare volumus omnes et rogamus ne suspicere nos nostrum pretermisise officium sponte et statuto: sed solum ignorancia voluntatis tue Quam cum nunc tandem cognoscimus: gaudemus certe: et pollicemur cum Cantebrigiam veneris, quocumque in tempore fuerit, te omnium concensu in nostram Ciuitatem, et (ut dicitur) in corpus acceptum fore. Nam maiori id voluptati non erit quam vniuersis nobis dignitati. Vtinam contingeret in quo nostro comodo tetracto, in te nostrum studium propter teipsum solum experiri potuisses. Sed quod diximus possumus, et fecimus, et tibi nunc significamus: ut intelligas quum velis ex nostro corpore quasi vnum membrum esse: ad eam rem nobis animum et promptam voluntatem non defuturam. Vale.
